

Curriculum

I am an archaeologist specialised in North European textiles and costumes. I received my Ph.D. in Prehistoric Archaeology from the University of Copenhagen (Denmark), and a M.Phil from Ancient Textile Unit, University of Manchester, UK. In 2005 I founded together with historian and Director Marie-Louise Nosch og archaeologist and Associate Professor Eva Andersson Strand the Danish National Research Foundation's Centre for Textile Research (CTR) at University of Copenhagen (DNRF64). I have analysed textiles for numerous museums in Denmark and abroad. My areas of research include Scandinavian and Roman textile and costume traditions, the use and production of prehistoric plant fibre materials, especially nettle and flax, and study of costume from iconographic sources. I have also worked intensively applying methods of dyeing technology, fibre analysis, fibre identification, protein, DNA, pollen, 14C and strontium isotope analyses to prehistoric textile and skin materials. The results of my work have provided new and unexpected insights into the development of textile techniques and technology throughout the longue durée of social development in prehistoric Scandinavia.
